To Whom It May Concern:

I know Melinda Kellogg as a talented young dancer, serious and creative, who has equal skill in the arts and sciences. She is a rare and complex individual who could succeed as both a physicist and choreographer, depending on where each of these two main interests takes her over the years.

I have worked with Melinda as her professor in modern dance technique and her director in modern dance repertory. She is quiet, attentive and self-corrective, generous with others and fiercely disciplined. She was my best student last year and progressed very rapidly in a short timespan.

As a performer in our spring concert she was responsible and supportive, looked beautiful onstage and managed to balance her various academic demands skillfully. She worked well with the other dancers and took time to coach behind the scenes when the need arose. She was accomodating with schedules, costumes, personalities. We will be greatly disappointed if she leaves our dance program.

Sincerely,
